To General Henry Knox, secretary of war.

[Headquarters, Grand Glaize, Ohio.] Informs Knox that the army took possession of the post on August 8. The enemy did not become aware of his approach until his men were well into the country and because of this there was no loss of life. The deserter Newman has given the enemy exact information of the numbers of the army. Comments on the beauty of the spot where he is encamped. Relates the building of the two forts, Defiance and Adams. Plans to make a decisive move forward on the morrow, heading toward Roche de Bout; yet he has sent a last offer to the Indians to make peace if they will. Is confident of victory if the enemy decide to fight. A.L.S. 4p. 12 1/2 x 8 in.

«Dublin» Refers to the World's Anti-Slavery Convention. Heard L. (C.) Mott make a speech. Comments on the American women delegates. Tells of the respect shown T. Clarkson at a session of the Convention. D. O'Connell was also well received at the same time. J. Sturge introduced Clarkson. Refers to the exclusion of the women delegates and the arguments of the American Abolitionists in favor of admitting them W. Phillips is going to Maria Waring's house for breakfast. Went to meetings with G. Thompson. Met Lady Byron. "Garrison is somewhat impetuous, like a moral torrent ... Lucretia Mott ... is considered a p[redacted]on of great ability ..." Explains the division in the [redacted]ican Abolitionists' ranks. Considers J. G. Birney "a nob[redacted]nd admirable man." Tells about

To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

[Dublin?] A letter about an article for the Liberty Bell written by "a fine young Irishman of 22," and John R. French and Stephen S. Foster. Says, "I do not choose it to be true that French is in the wrong, yet fear from the letter that it must be so..." Foster seems to the writer "a sombre man" and French "a warm young fellow, more like an Irishman." Remarks of the differences of opinion between Henry C. Wright and the writer and comments on the addressee's relation to (George?) Ticknor. Notes the individuality and contrasting traits of American visitors. Asks the addressee's opinion about John A. Collins's infidelity.

«Dublin, Ireland» R. D. Webb is in Cork with F. Douglass and J. N. Buffum, who "appear to be warmly received there." The writer has finished copying Mary Howitt's article. It shall be sent in the bazaar box as it may be worth something "as the autograph of a delightful woman & famous authoress." Considers the article "better suited to a keepsake wreath or Bijou than to your vigorous bell." The Hutchinson family has gone to Manchester to be seen and heard at the Free Trade bazaar. R. D. Webb wishes the singing of the Hutchinsons had more variety. " ... the provincialism of some of their comic effects prevents them from being appreciated." The writer remarks: "We get a wonderful variety of people from your shores." Comments regretfully on the case of N. P. Rogers, and analyzes his nature.

«Dublin, Irel.» Tells of family affairs. The Webbs are spending a few weeks in the country. Their oldest son (Alfred Webb) is delicate and town does not agree with him. The writer was delighted to receive books and letter from Boston. Considers the Liberty Bell excellent, but lacking in "spunk." Comments on the Belfry of Bruges: there is too much mannerism in Longfellow. The writer thinks that (Nathaniel P.) Rogers still has the light of genius, though dimmed, and that he was "more misled & erring than wicked." Characterizes Dr. (Richard Robert) Madden, who visited them: he is a good Catholic and regular Irish rebel, "as re[illegible] were counted forty years ago." A.L.S. 1 p. 10 5/8 x 8 1[illegible]. «With Webb, Richard Davis, letter to Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman.»

Webb, Hannah, "Mrs. Richard Davis Webb," 1809-1862 Ms.A.9.2
Vol.24
No.107

To «Anne Warren Weston»

« ? » The writer suggests mentioning the Misses Haughton and Miss Henzell in the acknowledgments of Anti-Slavery fair contributions. Comments on the difficulty of arousing Anti-Slavery interest-"people are so terribly afraid of contamination & heresy." The writer is troubled by "this whole matter of father Matthew" in the Liberator. "I know that Garrison is right & I am wrong & yet I wish to see the man handled more gently." Considers Father Mathew's advanced years and infirmities. The writer was delighted with Garrison's article Kossuth & Jesus. Garrison is "above caring whether you (or anybody in the whole universe) approve of what he says-he only stands for the right ..." The writer refers to the "grand time" that her husband had with our friends at Versailles."

To Caroline Weston

«Dublin, (Ireland)». The writer regrets that the addressee has given up visiting the Webbs now. Has had some misgivings about what they had to offer, but these "have almost disappeared now in the feeling of disappointment ..." R. D. Webb will go to the addressees. Suggests that she, Mrs. M. W. Chapman and G. Thompson return with him for a week's visit. the addressee could perhaps "pave the way for a december box of articles for the bazaar." George Thompson could have one or two public meetings, "while his American experience & zeal are fresh about him." The writer has enjoyed (James) Grant's articles and even condones [redacted] intolerance towards Garrison's "Extraneous subject." "Th[redacted]ession of orthodox people is very valuable, especially in England."

To "My dear Mary" (Mary A. Estlin) No.56

(Dublin, Ireland?). The writer encloses a letter received by R. D. Webb from (Frederick William) Chesson and an article written by Webb, on which he would like the addressee's opinion. The writer was rather surprised by Chesson's "strong terms both in praise of the old society & disapprobation of the British & Foreign (Anti-Slavery Society)" R. D. Webb is improving in health. They are expecting the visit of (James Miller) McKim.

«Dublin, (Ireland)». The writer says that the Anti-Slavery Advocate is ready to go to press; her husband is visiting a sick friend; the "Boston Box" (of contributions for the Anti-Slavery Bazaar) will be sent late; and W. Phillips's Address has been published as "an Appendix to the Annual Report." R. D. Webb wrote for some copies of Slavery As It Is, but failed to obtain them. "Mrs. Stowe's Key «to Uncle Tom's Cabin» will probably take its place." Writer is worried as to how Mrs. Stowe will act "when amongst the bigotted & exclusive folk in Edinburgh." The Glasgow Abolitionists are going to publish The Friend of the Fugit[redacted]. Refers briefly to S. Pugh. Mentions her daughters' sch[redacted]areers.

«Belfast, Ireland» The writer requests information "which will enable us to make an appeal to the public on behalf of your Bazaar." Stresses especially the need of awakening "the sympathies of shildhood in behalf of the oppressed," and therefore of calling the attention of mothers and governnesses to the evils of slavery. The Irish emigrants "intellectually prepared to sympathize" with the colored people would exert a different influence in their new homes than is now frequently manifested.

«Belfast, Ireland» Presents, in behalf of the Belfast Ladies Antislavery Association, a box of contributions to the fair. Discusses valuation in respect to custom duty. Although the muslin used is coarse, it is "unpolluted by slave labour." The Belfast Association's committee, in consideration of the tendency of Irish emigrants to have their minds open to prejudice and so to join the proslavery ranks, have turned to the schools of Ireland "as a fitting theatre for antislavery effort." In view of this, they must not present themselves to the public as exclusive a[illegible]nts of either the Garrisonian or the Liberty party.

To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

«Belfast» The writer informs Mrs. Chapman on behalf of the Belfast Ladies Antislavery Committee that they sent a box of articles for the Boston Bazaar. Each piece of work has been marked at the supposed price of the materials. Mentions the "valued friend" Frederick Douglass in connection with the contributions. Excuses the smallness of the offering on the ground that the peculiarly destitute state of the poor in her country has engrossed the attention of those who would otherwise have contributed to the American Bazaar. Many of the things in the box were purchased at a recent relief bazaar "with the express view of p[redacted]nting them to you." To Miss Weston. «Anne Warren Weston?»

«Dublin (Ireland)». Reports the death of the writer's father, Richard Davis Webb. The writer and his brother would have sent the addressee memorial cards had they known her address. Gives an account of his father's state of health and increasing weakness from the time the writer returned from California four months ago. Toward the end his father "became anxious to go." He took leave of his family on the evening of July 13th, then passed into unconsciousness and died at two o'clock the next morning. Richard D. Webb was in his 68th year. The injury he received on Lake Superior four years before is believed by the doctors to have hastened his death. A.L.S. 4p. 8 x 5 1/8 in.

« ? » The writer would prefer a portrait of "any of the Boston clique" to "those musty Puritan books," (possibly a gift of Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society). Referring to H. C. Wright's description of Daniel O'Connell, the writer does not think it would be easy to find "one who gives such a wrong impression by his flying style." Does not consider O'Connell "a morally great man." Inquires about Thomas Davis. Thinks that some of N. P. Rogers's writing "wants the sparkling brilliance of other days."

To Whom?

c ?] The writer has nothing ready for the Liberty Bell. "I don't know how to write 'articles'". James S. Buckingham, "the famous traveller & lecturer & temperance advocate was here." While in the United States he avoided all contact with Abolitionists, whom he censured for their "harsh language." The writer gives examples to prove that "squeamishness about words covers an enormous amount of indifference & hypocrisy." Tells about a Moorish Mohammedan who had learned the original Irish language in the Atlas mountains while trading with descendants of the old Carthaginians. Applies the story to "the wild Irish in Philadelphia."

"The Nation is the mouthpiece of young Ireland ... longing for an Irish Marathon or Thermopylae-bursting with admiration for Robert Tyler and the United States ..." To "My dear Friend" «Mrs.Maria(Weston)Chapman»

«Dublin (Ireland)» The writer had a letter today from H.C. Wright, who speaks despondingly of his prospects in Scotland since the publication of his book Six Months in Graefenberg. "This book is a curious farrago of hydropathy, nonresistance anti sabbath, anti church, & anti ministry," wholly unsuited to the atmosphere of Scotland. Wright has been denouncing the Free Church for accepting money from slaveholders. While he was here (in Dublin?) he "was abhorred & avoided by all outside our very small circle." The writer does not approve of having James Buffum accompany Douglass on a tour through the British Isles. Gives travel [redacted]ections for Frederick Douglass. In Dublin he is to drive d[redacted]y to the writer's home. The writer, attending the Anti-[redacted] Law Bazaar in London hoped to see Nathaniel Barney of Nantucket, but Barney arrived later. Saw George Thompson for the first time since he was in India; he is studying law. The Misses Hildreth, zealous anti-slavery ladies, were with him. The writer read (Richard) Hildreth's attack on (O.A.) Brownson and (Andrews) Norton, and would like to see his Theory of Morals. James Haughton and the writer read with delight Wendell Phillips on the anti-voting theory. "He writes with a pen of light & speaks with a tongue of flame." Regrets that Garrison published a letter in which the writer referred to (N.P.) Rogers, since he specially requested it should not be printed. Criticizes Garrison's theory of publishing without consent «Dublin?» The writer has a quantity of steel bugles which he will try to send to the Anti-Slavery Bazaar. Richard Allen received a letter from C. L. Remond saying that he was coming to England with F. Douglass. The writer thinks this will injure Douglass's mission. "I don't know an individual who would be really glad to see Remond again. He begged too much and too undisguisedly and behaved very often like a big spoiled child." The writer would like to know E. Quincy is getting on and if Mrs. Quincy is quite restored. Will be glad to see Arnold Buffum again.

The writer is treasurer and corresponding secretary of his little (A.S.) society, and happy to promote the addressee's objects. One of F. Douglass' converts, a Methodist, said that Douglass' visit had done much good in this sect. The Rev. Mr. Simpson G. Morrisson, a young Independent minister, gave three admirable antislavery lectures. The writer thinks the addressee's Report remarkably clear and full, though sometimes her "ironic flings" may puzzle the uninitiated. The writer is only a tradesman, with nothing in his position, wealth, birth, or demeanor to commend him to a gentleman, which he supposes Abdy to be. It is more difficult to start and sustain a periodical here than in America, and the writer doubts if Abdy would be the man (to have charge of it). The English people don't like those who try to force them to think. The writer thinks that the National Anti-Slavery Standard is not equal to what it was before Sydney H. Gay was married. The writer tells in detail about the care taken in the sending of a box (which has apparently not arrived). Intends to send a copy of a letter from (William) Goodell, which the writer would like to see published in the Standard with notes by Wendell Phillips. Thomas Moore is in poor health; the writer has had no reply from him. The writer has "begged on all hands" for the Liberty Bell, with little success. Summarizes the ideas expressed in William Goodell's letter. Inquires about (Geo[redacted]) Bradburn and regrets that "he is not at one with you."

To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

«Dublin, Ireland» The writer tells about an elderly friend who admires Napoleon and hates Daniel O'Connell. The friend reproached James Haughton for inconsistency, etc. yet the writer knows no man "more stern in his obedience to duty than he is." The writer says that his cousin Maria Webb cannot understand that it is impossible to promote the American Anti-Slavery Society and the Liberty Party "both together." He thinks that Garrison "settled Goodell very handsomely in a late Liberator." Yet it seems to him that if the extent of the numbers, labors and sacrifices of the Liberty Party be true, "it would be better [illegible] should frankly admit it." Saw a set of 14 volumes of the [illegible]rator for sale and would like to know their price. The w[illegible]er, having read the addressee's objections to giving to famine relief in Ireland, criticises

"I feel a good deal enlightened by all you have told me about William Goodell." Notes an inconsistency in the attitude of the Garrisonians toward the adherence of their followers to non-Abolitionist churches and political parties. "It seems to me the most natural thing in the world that the Americans to whom politics are the breath of life should think that nothing can be done without a political party." Gets the impression that the U.S. Constitution ranks with the Bible. The Old Organization Abol[redacted]ists are held to number too many heretics in their ran[redacted]y other Abolitionists. Goodell does not seem to "go the whole hog" with any party. The writer does not think those who differ with the Old Organization are necessarily dishonest. Thinks F. Douglass is jealous of G. Thompson. The writer mentions his letters in the National Anti-Slavery Standard. Says he liked Mary Howitt. "Just now James Haughton who loves popularity, is extremely unpopular... He is a corn factor" and has been blamed for the food shortage. The writer agrees that Anti-slavery funds should not be used for the purchase of a slave's freedom. (Dublin, Ireland) It is very kind of "the olique" to insist on the writer's crossing the Atlantic. However, though always out of debt, the writer is by no means "riding on the crest of the waves of fortune like Richard Allen." The writer would rather see the Abolitionists face to face than Rome or Athens. Received from H. C. Wright a letter from Halifax, which was intended for publication. The writer considers the habit of holding oneself before the public apt to result in a style neither natural or pleasing. Regrets that C. C. Burleigh is not to go abroad. The writer has only a slight acquaintance with the Howitts. [redacted]take them to be an upright, independent, well-minded pai[redacted]Thinks William Howitt to be quick-tempered, perhaps apt to take offence. "I greatly like his wife." Thinks "they have been entrapped by «John» Saunders to their very great annoyance and pecuniary loss." The writer judges Saunders to be a rascal from the fact that W. Howitt has published statements about Saunders that would entitle him to large damages for libel if they could be refuted. As Harriet Martineau remains the only contributor of note to the People's Journal, the writer suspects that she takes Saunders's side. Hears that R. W. Emerson intends to be in England in a few weeks and encloses an invitation for him to stay with the writer. It has seemed better not to circulate appeals for the Boston fair this year since "the extent of poverty and pauperism in Ireland is really frightful." Sends a

The writer asks as a favor that the addressee have a certain Mary Keogh, now residing in Boston, a former domestic in the house of friends, visited and her health and spirits reported on; this woman married a drunken, good-for-nothing bootmaker. The writer reports on his purchases for the Boston fair. Public statements by Edmund Quincy amused the writer, especially the notice of F.Douglass' new paper (North Star). "Quincy is certainly a wag of the first order." The writer, while he "can gossip away in the Standard well enough," does not want to see his platitudes in the Liberty Bell. «Dublin, Ireland» Since parting from the addressee in Liverpool, the writer has felt stupid and good for nothing, chiefly "owing to the reaction after such a paradise of dainty delights as you treated me to last week," and also because of "the endless drizzle... and the dismal prospects before all the people in this miserable country. The potatoes are rotting hard and fast-the jails are filling-and in short the country is as helpless and prostrate as its worst enemies could wish." Refers to the addressee's question about compensation for translation, and mentions Juliette Bauer, whose contribution he received to[illegible]and is sending on for the Liberty Bell. Suggests that t[illegible]ddressee meet Miss Bauer. A.L.S. 4 p. 7 1/4 x 4 5/8 in.

«Dublin (Ireland)» Sends a letter of introduction from the editor of the Manchester Examiner to Mme Calmache, writer of letters on the February Revolution published in his paper. The Bazaar prospectus of the Edinburgh Ladies A. S. Society leaves it to the option of the contributors to send gifts to Boston or to Rochester; nearly all from Belfast will go to Rochester, the ladies from Cork and those from Manchester mean to divide their gifts. Thinks that "as a strong romantic personal interest connects many contributors with Douglass, he will be likely to get a share of what is sent... it is not to Douglass' credit that he should have used his influence in this way for his own benefit..." The writer dwells at length on his correspondence with Miss (Harriet) Martineau, whom he had apparently offended by remarks in the Standard.

«Dublin, (Ireland)» Records that a letter from the addressee, mentioned by Caroline Weston, has not arrived. Some of "our faction" are sending an assortment of stationery directly from London. The Dublin box will be much smaller than usual. " I was so fortunate in meeting your sisters as to think them beyond whatever I hoped for — so you may imagine what glory I was in." The writer is "drawing up" a few pages for the Liberty Bell. Mentions that (Edmund) Quincy never writes to him. "He does better - for he fills the editorial chair in proper style."

«Dublin (Ireland)». A few years ago the writer would have thought himself lucky merely to have possessed the addressee's autograph. Discourses on hero worship. The writer has sent copies (with some omissions) of the addressee's remarks on "the Douglass matter" to Cork, Edinburgh, Manchester, and Wrenham. Has reason to hope that donations from Cork will not be less than last year. Of all the Irish contributors, Maria Waring (the writer's sister-in-law) is the most liberal. The writer explains his long hesitation to contribute to the Liberty Bell. Has now put together some "facts...and anecdotes about the antislavery people of L[redacted]ool." Comments on Haughton's verbosity and suggests that the addressee leave out as much as she pleases - "only put something in - for he is a true man - one of the best men I have any knowledge of." Remarks that there are "very few who know of or care for the cause here - and almost no literary people." The writer saw in the Liberator a notice by E. Divulges a "little plan" of visiting Paris next year with his wife, who has never met Mrs. Chapman. Praises his wife. The writer found Mrs.Chapman "altogether gracious, lady-like and pleasing." Miss (Caroline) Weston "is delightful, one to take you off your feet." The writer feels flattered by their cordial reception of him. Gives also his happy impressions of Miss Mary (Gray) Chapman and Mrs. Chapman's children. The writer was so delighted with the autobiography of Joseph Barker that he traveled to Wortley to [redacted] him. Summarizes Barker's life history. To "My dear Friend" «Anne Warren Weston»

«Dublin, Ireland» The writer regrets that the addressee was not in Paris when he was there. "I never enjoyed any visit since my courting days half as much as that to Versailles." Refers with enthusiasm to "these women whom I have held in the highest respect and admiration" (Mrs. Chapman and Caroline Weston). Comments on Dr. (W. H.) Harvey's book on marine botany. Of the two boxes for the Anti-Slavery fair, one contains stationery, the other "odds and ends from Dublin." Anything for the North Star should be sent at once, "to keep Douglas from suspecting us of robbing him." The largest contributor is Maria Waring. [redacted] writer sent Fox's Martyrs from his own library. Express[redacted] attitude toward "Popery;" considers Father Mathew "o[redacted]f the best of the lot." A.L. 4 p. 8 1/8 x 5 1/4 in.

To "My dear Friend" ‹Anne Warren Weston›

‹Dublin, Ireland› A letter concerned with the prices of books and the "alarming reductions" at which books are sold, "which have been consigned on speculation by the London booksellers." One of these books was a rare French translation of an English work on the Corallines of the British Islands, which was given to the writer by Dr. W. H. Harvey. The writer has had a letter from Emma Weston. Wishes he might see the three Weston sisters who (for him) "remain unseen." Criticises H. C. Wright's lack of good taste. Wants the addressee to tell what she thinks of J. G. Whittier and why. The writer is reading Sout[redacted]s life of Wesley. Comments critically on Methodists.

The writer hopes for the "honor and glory" of a visit from the addressee, even though "Dublin and Ireland are poor places in every respect." The writer's wife has left him to visit her sister in Waterford. Another sister, Maria Waring, is with him. She has been for many years "the most munificent single contributor in Ireland and perhaps in the three kingdoms, to the Boston Bazaar." The The writer wishes he could hear the voice of Wendell Phillips. Robert Edmond, a Scotchman, who was tarred and feathered in South Carolina, is here now. He is enthusiastic about the Abolitionists. To Mary A. Estlin

«Dublin, (Ireland)» The writer regrets that the last issue of the Anti-Slavery Advocate contained so few interesting items. "I send you the last Standards lest you may not have seen its comments on the October Advocate." Discusses the attitude of the editors of the National Anti-Slavery Standard. Heard that his son Alfred had reached Melbourne, Australia, after a trip of "one week less than 100 days."

«Dublin» The writer thinks that the letter written by the addressee to James Haughton may have done some good. "Joseph Sturge is one of his dear friends. Thomas Harvey of Leeds who visited the West Indies in company with Sturge is another. Maria Webb is his sister-in-law." Discusses Mrs. H.B.Stowe's influence and how it could most profitably be employed. Hopes that she may meet G. Thompson and J. B. Estlin.

«Dublin, (Ireland)». The writer defends his letter in the National Anti-Slavery Standard in which he took the side of those who criticised the Address of Lord Shaftesbury. Condemns J. Scoble for being a tool of bigotry. "Scoble was in my opinion actively mischievous & his employer passively so." Does not, nevertheless, expect much from L. A. Chamerovzow. "Joseph Sturge & Co. are too old to change greatly for the better."

Says that he, his wife and his sister-in-law are the only Irish Abolitionists who appreciate the Garrisonians. Thinks that the opponents of Garrison are just narrow in their beliefs, not wicked. Says he [redacted] not know G. W. Alexander and has "not conversed half an [illegible]ogether in my life with Joseph Sturge." Opposes Chamerovzow's idea of another World Convention. P. Pillsbury wrote him that the National Anti-Slavery Standard was "not worth its keep."

«Dublin?, (Ireland)» First part of letter missing. The remainder contains part of an account of an archeological expedition in which the writer's nephew took part. Refers to William McDonnell, the Australian merchant. Mrs. M. W. Chapman criticised the writer for upholding the English Quakers' objection to Lord Shaftesbury's draft of the Ladies' Stafford House Address, on the ground that it failed to urge immediate emancipation. Lord Shaftesbury would have included a plea for immediate emancipation, if it had been presented to him in time. "... Mrs. Stowe has not acted with fairness or magnanimity to the Ladies A. S. «Dublin, (Ireland». The writer tells about his son's embarkation on a ship bound for Australia. Alfred Webb was going on the voyage for his health. Mentions Garrison's voyage to England in 1840 and his cool reception by the Gurneys, etc. The writer tells how he came to meet Harriet Martineau. Talks at length about the Australian voyage and Alfred's fellow-passengers, consignment of merchandise for sale and the arrangements for paying for his passage. Discusses the relations of Joseph Sturge with the American Anti-Slavery Society. Says that the English public thinks well of Sturge's Abolitionism. Likes L. A. Chamerovzow, who is having trouble winning over the Committee of the British & Foreign Anti-Slavery Society to an alliance with the American Abolitionists.

«Dublin, (Ireland)» The writer thinks that Mrs. M. W. Chapman exaggerated the "active hostility" of the Committee of the British & Foreign Anti-Slavery Society. He blames J. Scoble, the former Secretary, for the "active mischief" done by the Committee. Says that the Anti-Slavery Reporter shows L. A. Chamerovzow's influence. Is well satisfied with Mrs. M. W. Chapman's account of Mrs. H. B. Stowe. Says that Mrs. Chapman is "a keen judge of character and generally leans to the stern side in her estimates of character." Calls Mrs. Stowe "a type of «the» back number in the United States who are hardly touched by the turmoil of the Abolition warfare." Discusses Anti-Slavery fair advertisements for the Anti-Slavery Advocate. Does not want to advertise "that factious(?) fair got up by Julia Griffit[redacted]r Douglass." «Dublin, (Ireland)». The writer learns from Parker Pillsbury that the addressee may visit Bristol. Did not wish to disturb the addressee while she was with Miss Martineau. Would like to know how Lucia and the other "Italian Westons" are. Was pleased with the handsome wedding present that Thomas Sturge made to Madame Augel (Elizabeth B. Chapman). The writer has enjoyed knowing Pillsbury,"-but the influence of people of the Anna Richardson clan ... have greatly narrowed up his way. The adherents of Douglass too are doing as much mischief as they can." Hopes the addressee approves of the writer's compliments to Victor Schoelcher in the last Anti-Slavery Advocate.

«Dublin, (Ireland)» Parker Pillsbury asks if his coming over here as an agent would be useful. The writer emphasizes the "feebleness and timidity of the antislavery spirit" in the United Kingdom. Recalls a conversation about E. Quincy's free application of Bible language. "Well, British touchiness on this point is amazingly sensitive. Formalism is powerful, and those who are not formal care little for Antislavery." The writer explains that he is almost isolated. The fact that a man stopped at his house would "make him suspected by the 'religious' people." P. Pillsbury's "high flown, somewhat hyperbolical style" would frighten the timid, religious class and shock the taste of the upper class of educated people. «Dublin, (Ireland)» The writer discusses the possibility of the addressee's coming to the British Isles. Concerning the question of his coming as agent, the writer says, "I doubt if Wendell Phillips with his surpassing talents & unsurpassed eloquence so finished & elegant, would add greatly to the practical antislavery of the three kingdoms by a lecturing tour ... The actual laborers and the untiring sympathizers are very few." Nevertheless the (American) Society might send the addressee as a sort of private agent and he could improve his health. Mary Estlin "had a poor time of it in Rome from the relaxing nature of the climate which suits Lucia Weston perfectly but is death to her." Asks the addressee to tell Samuel May that Texas (by Frederick L. Olmsted) has come to hand.

writer saw the addressee's sister in Rome. Says that he and Anne Weston are both short-sighted. Has heard that "the Bazaar is doomed ..." The news of its discontinuance came as a great surprise. "As to politics you know that our Derby Ministry owes its existence to the unpopular deference of that unprincipled Lord Palmerston towards Louis Napoleon ..." Discusses Mary A. Estlin's health, and describes her appearance. Expresses his faith in the value of the Anti-Slavery Advocate. Thinks there must be something peculiar in the mental and physical constitution of Harriet Martineau. Marvels at her ability to writer as voluminously as she does. Supposes that the addressee has heard that the tales of Sepoy atrocities were false. G. Thompson is in the Himalayas.

To "My Dear Friend" «Anne Warren Weston»

«Greenfield, Kilgobbin, Co.Dublin» The writer wonders at the "unreserved exultation on the part of many out and out friends of nonresistance among the abolitionists at the opening of a long and bloody struggle." Thinks that "there was no sufficient provocation for the outbursts of anger in the United States at the neutral position of England... since the struggle on the part of the free states has never yet taken the aspect of an antislavery struggle on the part either of the government or the people." Nevertheless the writer believes that the great majority of people who had any opinion are in favor of the free states. The cotton interest is powerful. A strong feeling prevails in England that American newspaper editors are bound to pick a quarrel with her. The writer does not wonder at this, as so large a portion of the American population are Irish who hate England. Gives the opinion of

«(Dublin, Ireland)» The writer says Samuel May agrees that the course of the British government is right, but that he expects England to sympathize with "the various incidents of an antislavery tendency." These, the writer thinks, can be known only to readers of anti-slavery papers. Nine tenths of the American visitors to England are "either openly pro-slavery or apologists for the system." The writer enumerates reasons for lack of sympathy with the North. There is a large wealthy class of merchants and manufacturers to whom the supply of cotton is "as the breath of life." The majority of the English middle class are averse to slavery. The general view is sceptical of an "army of volunteers imperfectly officered." The writer expresses admiration for Harriet Martineau. The Life of John Brown, compiled by the writer and his wife, has just been published.

«Dublin (Ireland)» Thanks the addressee for the portrait of Azeglio. Hesitates to discuss the controversial American question. A large majority of travelled Americans "do their best... to inculcate views favorable to slavery..." Since the war is evidently for the maintenance of the Union, and not for the abolition of slavery, it is expecting too much to look for English sympathy. "John Bull should regard the probable termination of the Union with some complacency," since, instead of one powerful opponent, there will be two nations. To [Caroline Weston]

[Greenfield, Kilgobbins Co., Dublin] The writer objects to the addressee's condemnation of the British for their attitude toward the American Civil War. Says that the Bristish don't understand American politics, and their opinions on this subject are strongly influenced by American visitors who have defended or apologized for slavery and have represented the Abolitionists as foolish, irreligious, meddling fanatics. The British derive a vindictive pleasure from seeing the U.S. with a rebellion on her hands, after having freed herself from England by this means. They also note that the North is not officially interested in freeing the slaves. Says the northern Democratic editors hate the Abolitionists worse than they do the secessionists. Mentions William Dawes of Oberlin who thought that temperance prevai[redacted]n Ireland. The writer comments on newspaper writers and points out that the French, who have shown less favor to the North are flattered, while the English get abuse. Believes that there is nobody in Europe who has done as much as Harriet Martineau to promote the Anti-Slavery cause in England. "No, not George Thompson, General «Thomas Perronet» Thompson, John Bright & Richard Cobden rolled into one." The writer regards Mrs. Chapman "as the largest minded mortal of whom I have any knowledge." Professor John Elliot Cairnes is writing a book "on the other side" of the Civil War. The writer is printing it and is supplying facts and documents. The writer invites the addressee to his house, where she will find his wife good company. "You are one of the best talkers I ever knew."

«Dublin, Ireland» The writer has read in the Liberator of the arrival of M.Laugel and family. "...what a reception he will get from all who appreciate the talents & labours he has devoted to the Federal cause." The writer mentions "the tide of ignorance & prejudice which sweeps the vast majority of the newspaper reading public before it in this country." The Times is the idol and mouthpiece for 19/20 of all whom the writer meets. Some here wish that the South may establish independence, because they fear for England if the Union should be restored. The writer has long wished that Lincoln might be the next President. Miss(Frances Power) Cobbe, who is bringing out a complete edition of (Theodore) Parker's works, is an intimate friend of Miss Estlin's.

The writer, referring to Sumner's fear of English intervention, says that he himself never feared active intervention except at the time of the Trent affair; believes that rulers and people sincerely desire to keep out of war. Has been "amazed by the energy, resources & perseverance exhibited by the Southerners in their effort to obtain an unfettered victory for their evil 'institution'." The writer enumerates various reasons for British lack of sympathy with the North, and yet the "powerful portion of people which ranks between the peasantry & the wealthy gentry & manufacturers has sufficed to prevent any serious disposition to take an active part in the American quarrel."Even at the time of the Trent affair the writer did not fear government intervention. Although there have been blockades and war ships have been supplied, the writer thinks that such acts are now disapproved. "I am even more of a republican than ever."

To Rev. Samuel May Jr.

«Dublin, Ireland» The writer says he received the letters about the death of Samuel Joseph May. Praises S. J. May. Discusses S. J. M.'s relations with Horace Mann. The writer says James Haughton is in poor health. Makes suggestions about the forthcoming biography of S. J. M. Sends an account of the Oberammergau Passion Play.

To "My dear friend" «Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman?»

«Dublin (Ireland)» Mrs. May (wife of Samuel May, jr.) sails today from Queenstown. "She is a charming woman." Mrs. May spent a week at the writer's house, and did her shopping with his daughter and sister-in-law. The writer does not doubt that Mr. May will do a good biography of his cousin Samuel Joseph May. Praises S.J. May and notes that he made few enemies. Tells of communistic trends envisaged by a "deep thinking" friend; the writer, being "less philosophical and more cheerful," expects things to "go on pretty much as they have done heretofore." The writer was shocked by the "terrible Revere railway collision in which so many were scalded to death." Dr. Ezra (Stiles) Gannet lost his life. William Lloyd Garrison, Jr. was terribly scalded about the head and hands. He is married to a niece of Lucretia Mott. The Villards are

To Rev. Samuel May Jr.

«Dublin, Ireland» The writer acknowledges receipt of the Boston Ladies appeal. Says James Haughton came to see him. Denies that his cousin, William H. Webb, is building a ship for the Confederates. Says that ten times as many small arms go to the North from England as go to the South, and the North's worst enemy is not England, but treachery within its own ranks. ...
